Describe your personality and character:	I would describe myself as introspective observer. I thrive on one-on-one or small group conversations about thoughts, ideas and theories. I always challenge myself with learning new subjects, hobbies and crafts and seek to learn from others more well versed than I am. Although I require "me time" to recharge, I can successfully and enjoyably wear the hat of a social butterfly. My varied interests and genuine curiosity lend to meaningful conversations with almost anyone. I am extremely open minded and accepting of most things (I would say all things, but I can't confidently say I know all things), even if I disagree with them. In seeking new friendships and relationships, integrity, adherence to personal morals, and intelligence are the most important qualities to me. A quick wit and dry sense of humor usually makes for hilarious banter.
How would you describe your childhood?	I was forced to be independent at a very early age. Because my parents both had early work schedules, I would wake myself up and prepare myself for school entirely on my own beginning in third grade. At the end of the day, I was responsible for completing all of my work and the house cleaning by the time my parents got home, around 6:30. I loved classes growing up. School was always something I was good at. I made good grades very easily. I was selected to be in two different gifted programs in grade school, but because my family moved around often, I was not able to reap the full rewards of those programs. Not surprisingly, I found it difficult to make friends growing up. In grade school I felt as if I was outcasted from the "popular kids," but was never odd enough for the "weird kids." I felt that the only thing the girls talked about was the boys, and the only thing the boys talked about was the girls. Frankly, I didn't care about either. Things got better in high school as I learned to wear my social butterfly hat when needed. I was selected as class president, selected to be on home coming court, selected as captain of the volleyball team for two years, and as prom committee president. My college applications looked great, but, I learned that genuine friendships are unicorns. While I had many "friends," I really only had two persons that I would identify as genuine friends in high school. I was enrolled in gymnastics, ballet, tap, and karate growing up. I enjoyed gymnastics the most, partially because it was something I excelled at. I was very shy during ballet and tap classes and during video tapes of the recitals I am seen obviously backing away from the line of girls as not to be in the forefront and center. Believe it or not, I wasn't the most graceful student. After running directly into a wall (unfortunately, this incident occurred exactly how it sounds), which required an extended ER stay and a week off of school, and breaking my arm to the point of surgery, my mother thought my energy would be better used elsewhere. My summers were spent with my aunts. One aunt had a horse farm in central Virginia with Tennessee Walkers and Arabians. Another aunt was very artistic and had the luxury of being able to spend her entire days in an art studio. While at the farm I would tend to, feed, clean, and ride the horses. While at the studio I would fling paint around to my heart's content. I very much enjoyed my summers and contribute those experiences to my deep love of animals and art.

What's your favorite childhood memory?

My father and I were vacationing in southern California. My father and I are alike in many respects. We have the same personality and seem to connect on a deeper level than I do with other family members. Without a plan, we simply drove. We drove to Santa Monica and walked on the boardwalk. The boardwalk was shut down save the ferris wheel. The contrast of the lively ferris wheel next to a shut down and somewhat broken cotton candy machine made for interesting photos.

	I pay for my jumps by packing rigs. I'm currently researching hobby beekeeping to see if I can make my own honey. I also do yoga three times a week, run and cycle. I'm hoping I can conquer swimming in the near future and begin triathlon training.
What sports or activities have you excelled in?	When I was younger I loved gymnastics. I was a setter in indoor volleyball for seven years throughout middle and High school. I've completed two marathons and annually participate in a two day BikeMS 150 mile cycling event. I am also a two time reigning champion of the Annual Thanksgiving Bocce Ball Single Elimination Tournament, for what it's worth.
Describe any artistic/musical talents you have:	As a teenager I saved all of my money and purchased an acoustic Taylor guitar. Disappointingly, I still haven't dedicated the time to learn how to play. As much as I love music and the way it makes me feel, I'm sad to say that I am the only member of my family ignorant to the making of music. Outside of music, I am a very creative person. Growing up I won many writing contests. Writing is my ultimate outlet. When I say writing is my outlet, I don't mean ambiguous creative poetry. I mean prolific writing. I can much better express myself through words than I can speaking, even though I would say I'm pretty articulate. I can't draw or paint inside the lines very well, so it's difficult for me to say I have artistic talent. However, I can confidently say that I am a creative person.
What are your future goals?	I plan on enrolling in a graduate Physician's Assistant program and working in a neuroscience or orthopedic capacity. I'd love to move to Denver or Seattle, begin growing my roots and writing the next chapter of my life. It's a romantic idea, but I'd love to have a couple acres with a small happy yellow house, a vegetable garden, a few sheep, a goat and my dogs.
